Tabel A2. Internationale en EU frameworks voor de bescherming van vluchtelingen

Level	Framework	Description
Global	Comprehensive Refugee Response Framework, 2016 ¹	The CRRF is a set of commitments to addressing the large-scale movements of refugees. It identifies four areas of action: (i) reception and admission measures; (ii) support for immediate and ongoing needs; (iii) support for host countries; and (iv) enhanced opportunities for durable solutions. This framework was the first to link humanitarian action with development assistance. In this approach, host countries would benefit from support with reception mechanisms and in providing humanitarian and security measures while making improvements to local conditions to enable return and alleviate pressure on host countries. The CRRF stressed meeting immediate and ongoing needs in countries of origin, supporting admission measures in host states and encouraging regional responsibility sharing through durable solutions.

Global Compact on Refugees, 2018	Building on the principles of the CRRF, this framework sets out voluntary contributions to achieve collective outcomes under the principles of burden- and responsibility-sharing to better protect and assist refugees, and support host countries and communities. The main objectives are to: (i) ease pressures on host countries; (ii) enhance refugee self-reliance; (iii) expand access to third country solutions; and (iv) support conditions in countries of origin for return in safety and dignity. To operationalize burden- and responsibility-sharing this framework proposes: humanitarian assistance for emergency and protracted refugee situations; development cooperation for host countries beyond regular development resources; maximizing private sector contributions, to create jobs and introduce innovative technology, financial products and information services for refugees and host communities. Among potential partners, we find humanitarian and development actors, UN agencies, national parliaments, networks of cities and municipalities, local authorities and local actors, civil society organizations, faith-based actors, academics, sports and cultural organizations and public-private partnerships. The Global Compact aims to facilitate access to durable solutions, which include voluntary repatriation, resettlement and local integration. While the preferred solution is voluntary repatriation (within the boundaries of non-refoulement), the Compact includes a plea for more resettlement as well as complementary pathways for admission to third countries including family reunification, private or community sponsorship programmes, humanitarian visas, scholarships and student visas, and labour permits for refugees. Local integration is a big component of this framework, emphasizing a move towards the local integration of refugees, with the ultimate objective of durable legal status and naturalization. Refugees and new asylum seekers should access: various forms of protection including security screenings and health assessments of new arrivals; food security and nutrition; education, vocational training, language skills, and access to the labour market. Moreover, partner must include actions to ensure the peaceful coexistence of refugees and host communities.
Global Compact for Safe, Orderly and Regular Migration, 2018	This cooperative framework fosters international cooperation among all relevant actors on migration to optimize the overall benefits of migration, while addressing risks and challenges for individuals and communities in countries of origin, transit and destination. The target populations are vulnerable migrants among whom irregular migrants, victims of smuggling and trafficking as well as local communities affected by the arrival of migrants. This Compact aims to address the drivers of migration, reduce risks and vulnerabilities of migrants and concerns for communities, enable migrants to enrich societies and facilitate sustainable development at all levels. Showing some overlaps with the Global Compact on Refugees, this Compact promotes the respect, protection and fulfilment of the human rights of migrants, regardless of their status and stage of migration cycle. The Compact lays out 23 objectives, some of which are relevant for ‘protection in the region’ initiatives: a strengthened collaboration between humanitarian and development actors to respect human rights and encourage the resilience, coping capacities and self-reliance of migrants (objective 1); developing accessible and expedient procedures to facilitate transitions in legal status, and reduce precariousness and vulnerabilities (objective 7); increase migrants’ access to basic services and their full inclusion in society along with the local community (objectives 15 and 16); migrants’ skills development, recognition of qualifications and

		competences (objective 18); and the creation of suitable conditions for migrants and diasporas to fully contribute to sustainable development in all countries (objective 19).
EU	Regional Protection Programmes (RPP)/ Regional Development and Protection Programmes (RDPP)	The RPP were introduced in 2005 to promote return, local integration and resettlement in a third country. It included capacity building of institutions and local actors and encouraged durable solutions in origin and transit regions. In 2014, the RPPs were strengthened and expanded, including greater global resettlement efforts and particular focus on the crisis in Syria. From 2014, RPPs have become RDPPs – Regional Development and Protection Programmes. These programmes have been primarily implemented by UNHCR, so they are largely part of UNHCR operations with EU funding. These programmes include a wide variety of activities to strengthen capacities – from border control, reception, identification, registration, accommodation centers, legal counselling and social assistance, trainings, seminars, and strengthening resettlement. As time passes, however, attention has focused on training of border guards and on border management. Conversely, resettlement is very small scale, a few to a couple hundred resettled people, and evidence of integration efforts in transit countries is limited. While these programmes have strengthened protection capacities in transit area, they have also been criticized for their very broad scope and relatively limited impact. These programmes’ ambitions to support host communities require funding public sector budgets to enable welfare services, expand employment opportunities for refugees and host populations which are not always easily accessible. Lastly, these programmes have enjoyed limited participation of local authorities as well as international organizations and have seen European countries reluctant to allow resettlement of refugees (Papadopoulou 2015).²
	Global Approach to Migration and Mobility (GAMM), 2011 ³	The European Commission’s GAMM has four priorities: (i) better organised legal migration and mobility; (ii) addressing irregular migration; (iii) maximising the development impact of migration; and (iv) strengthening international protection. The GAMM includes several political instruments (action plans, political dialogues) and legal instruments (visa facilitation, readmission). The key frameworks through which these tools are used and cooperation between the EU and third countries is negotiated is through Mobility Partnerships and migration and security dialogues.

Common Agendas on Migration and Mobility (CAMM)	Joint Declarations for a Common Agenda on Migration and Mobility have been signed between the EU and countries that have importance as origin, transit and destinations of irregular migrants. Such Joint Declarations have been signed with Ethiopia (2015) and India (2016). In such agreements, international protection is of limited relevance and rather institutional in nature. For example, in the EU-India Joint Declaration, the main concerns are regular migration management, irregular migration and trafficking and maximizing the development impact of migration. While the promotion of international protection is one of the four areas of joint management, this relates primarily to the collection and exchange of data on people in need of protection, sharing information on practices and international norms, cooperation with UNHCR and other relevant agencies, meeting the needs of unaccompanied minors and other vulnerable groups in need of international protection and collaboration in capacity building on processing claims of persons in need of international protection.
European Council on Refugees and Exiles (ECRE), Vision of Europe's Role in the Global Refugee Protection Regime: Policy Paper 3, Feb 2017	This position paper presents a set of critiques and recommendations on the application of the Common European Asylum System and its obligation for effective protection of refugees and displaced people in Europe, in regions of origin and transit. Based on the values of solidarity and responsibility-sharing, this paper considers a wide variety of possible solutions that ensure the protection of refugees and displaced people, including offering greater protection in countries of origin and transit. However, it alerts European Member States that offering more protection outside of Europe does not remove their obligation to protect refugees who arrive spontaneously on their territories and neither does not validate the return and transfer of asylum seekers from Europe to other countries. The paper highlights that European efforts have focused on keeping migrants and refugees away, discharging protection responsibilities on partner countries. Such an approach fails to consider the perspectives of refugees, and migrants more generally, who seek protection and safety. In particular, attempts to reduce onward migration are futile until it is acknowledged that refugees migrate in search for better protection. As more and more refugees and IDPs are left without a sustainable solution, with over 1 million of refugees seeking resettlement every year and just over 100,000 resettled every year, refugees resort to spontaneous onward migration in their individual search for a durable solution. Durable solutions beyond repatriation, resettlement and local integration are necessary. A way forward is to provide assistance to host communities and countries, guarantee safe and regular channels for refugees, linking forced displacement with the protection of rights of all migrants in all situations, and connecting various forms of mobility with efforts to address causes and drivers of displacement. Despite the pitfalls of offering protection outside of Europe, ECRE also acknowledges that by protecting refugees in third countries, the asylum space enlarges, enabling more opportunities for cooperation between the EU and third countries.
EU Pact on Migration and Asylum, 2020	Among many points raised in this framework, it sets out the key objective of helping refugees who reside in third countries. To support this goal, it promotes 'comprehensive governance at EU level for better management and implementation of asylum and migration policies' and the engagement in 'mutually beneficial partnerships with key third countries of origin and transit.' (2). Engagement with partner countries is a central and the Commission aims to pursue agreements with EU neighbours for migration management, including protection, asylum, resettlement and return procedures. EU neighbours are important, particularly Turkey's role in refugee protection: the hosting of 4 million

	refugees will need to be sustained with EU funding going forward. Engagement with partner countries can also take place between Member States and partners. In section 6.2 “Protecting those in need and supporting host countries”, the EU Pact stresses the important role of the EU in creating mechanisms for onward resettlement, as that of people in desperate circumstances in Libya who were resettled in Niger and Rwanda. Moreover, the EU’s Facility for Refugees in Turkey and the EU Regional Trust Fund in Response to the Syrian crisis have provided assistance to Syrian refugees in Turkey, Lebanon, Jordan and Iraq. When specifying specific actions, however, most attention is given to assisting partner countries in “strengthening capacities for border management, including by reinforcing their search and rescue capacities at sea or on land, through well-functioning asylum and reception systems, or by facilitating voluntary returns to third countries or the integration of migrants’ (EU Pact, 2020: 20). Actions to support the protection of asylum seekers, refugees and other vulnerable migrants or for their local integration in education, access to service and the labour market are less visible. However, concerning resettlement, the Commission aims to formalize the scheme of approximately 29,500 resettlement places for 2020-2021 and it will invite higher pledges from 2022 onward. The EU budget will support resettlement as well as other complementary pathways to protection, e.g. humanitarian visas, student and work visas and community and private sponsorship programs, with funding, capacity building and knowledge-sharing.
